We are so accustomed to refer to the great distress which natives have been suffering from for the last year, as the Famine in Chins, that little attention has been paid to the fact as to whether the word "Famine" is or is not properly applied, but the Chinese Government have not admitted by their actions that Manchuris was suffering from scarcity. On the contrary, one may suppose that stocks of millet, beans, etc., are plentiful—so plentiful indeed that many cargoes have been shipped away. Instead of staying the export of grain as a mercaptile commodity, several steamers have setually been laden for ports in Shantung, and the Government transport Les yuen is now taking what are called "Tribute Beaus" for Taku, lientein, Peking -- the locality is uncertain-but it is said on Government account. Now unless the grain be taken to relieve greater distres than where it is taken from, how can the Government accept such tribute? Every shipment enhances the value of what remains, and the price of millet and other cereals is so high that for the poor labourer, who has only ten cents, a day for wages, it is difficult to live if he epidemic in which it is said no less than $80,000 new regulations came into force they had paid has to pay double what it cost him last year.

tion of that period, in which case part of the up on account of one or more bad harvests, rent was repaid. He did not charge them with or because the land has been inundated, improperly building houses on the land, his etc., but the word "Famine" as meaning complaint was that they would not pay any that there is not enough food in the prorent or take out licences. The Government did vince, is a misnomer, and this is verified by not want the land for any purpose so far as he the export of what is called Tribute Grain, Millet, Beans, etc., unless the Celestial Government are bent on completely starving out the masses of this already poorest of poor provinces Chinese Loan '65 of China. THE JELESU MINES. The distance frem Seremban to Jelebu twenty-three miles over a pratty difficult road, although good enough for its chief purposerullock-cart traffic. I found the easiest way o covering it, having regard to the fact that I wanted the Sunday in Seremban, was to start after dinner on Sunday night and sloop at Pantei nolice station, seven miles on the way, and then do the remaining sixteen miles early on Monday morning. So on Sunday night, about ten o'clock, with a kind of rough dog-cart and two ponies, I got under way, had a night's rest in the police station, and arrived in Kuala Klawang in Jelebu in ample time to breakfast with Mr. Dunman, the manager of the Jelebu Mining Co. Mr. Dunman's chief characteristic is energy. There are no mid-day siestes with him, and having weakly admitted that I was a protty fair walker, and was willing to undergo a little fa igue to see his operations, he carried me off, without any regard to the babits of the Native States, and walked me round from noon till dinner time. I consider that that day was the hardest of all my fortnight; but it was interesting. The chief seat of the Jelebu Company's present operations is in a valley beginning about three miles from the the town, and from which branch other valleys known to be rich in tin. Up the course of the valley, for about six miles, Mr. Dunnan has made a bridle track, which in time may be replaced by a State road-indeel should be replaced by that as soon as possible. In the valley the company bas a few mines in going order which. I am told, yield a very good profit; but chiefly the manager's energy is devoted to opening new mines there. According to Mr. Donman, the whole valley is rich in tin, and it is only a question of getting the selected spots cleared of jungle and of building kongsie houses (two operations which must be carried out by Malay labour), and after that the mining will go on. Coolies and towkays he cays he can get, and that be will ultimately have a thousand men at work in the ralley. The overburden, I can personally bear witness, is very light-a very few feet-and absolutely no pamping is required, while hinamen can get at once to their tin, and so no very heavy advances need be made. It should be added that the difficulties of clearing jungle and building kongstes are enormous. The binaman is useless at that, and the Malays, as is their nature, are indifferent. I believe not only from what I have seen, but fro what others in the place have told me, that Mr. Dunman has worked with the most untiring energy; but if I had any say in the affairs of the Jeleba Company, I would not allow him to remain there alone and unnided. There are limits to what one man can do, and in the affairs of the Jelebu Company, with its mines scattered over many miles, these limits are resched. I am sure that the Company loses. and will lose, by having only one European in company are intended to earn a dividend-le as say a fon per cent. dividend-on $150,000 Clearly then the couple of thousand dollars a year which would procure an assistant o pnot materially affect the losses or profits of the concern, while the lack of an assistant may, and think must affort these. If tunman were to cident, the bulk of the present operations would cease within forty-eight hours, and before a new man could be put in charge, much barm might have been done. And how much use would a new man be with no key to the plans and arrange. ments of the works? To fling all the burden on one man is not economy. - Straits Times.

General Bherman's last mot is in circulation. INTERESTING LETTER PROM A VETERAN.

As this is Jubilee year it tends to make one look back and think of the flight of time, and in this way I am reminded that I am one of the veterans in the sale of your valuable and successful medicine. I have sold it from the very first, and have sent it into every county in England and many parts of Scotland. Well do I remember the first circular you sent out some hins or. ten years ago. You had come to England from America to introduce Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, and I was struck by a paragraph in which you used these words:- "Being a stranger in a strange land. I do not wish the people to feel that I want to take the least advantage over them. I feel that I have a remedy that will cure disease, and I have so much confidence in it that I authorise my agents to refund the money if people should say that they have not benefitted by its use." I felt at once that you would never say that unless the medicine had merit, and Lapplied for the agency, a step which I now look back upon with pride and satisfaction; Ever since that time I have found it by far? the best remedy for Indigestion and l'yspepsia I have met with, and I have sold thousands of bottles. It has never fulled in any case where there were any of the following symptoms:-Nervous or sick headache, sourness of the stomach, rising of the food after eating, a sense of fulness and heaviness, dizziness, bad breath, slime and muous on the gums and teeth, constipation, and yellowness of the eyes and skin, dull and sleepy sensations, ringing in the cars, heartburn, loss of appetite, and, in short, wherever there are signs that the system is clogged, and the blood is out of order. Upon repeated inquiries covering a great variety of silments my oustomers have always answered "I am better," or " I am perfectly weil." What I have seldom or never seen before in the case of any medicine is that people tell each other of its virtues, and those who have been cured any to the suffering: "Go and get Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, it will make you well." Out of the bundreds of oures I will name one or two that happen to come into my mind.

Two old gentlemen, whose names they would not like me to give you, had been martyre to Indigestion and Dyspepsis for many years. They had tried all sinds of medicine without relief. One of them was so had he could not beer a glass of ale, Both were advised to use the Syrop and both recovered and were as hale and hearty Ri men to the prime of life.

much to tell, but the little that is left is the kernel of this history. That night, amid the strain of strong emotions, she was brought to bed before her time was yet was dend, but his sen was living. full. Her labour was hard, and long she lay between life and death, for the angel of hope did from it no more. The broad daz le of the not pull with her. the yearning that answered to its ery. It was then for the first time since her lying in that the old mother came to hor. She had been out searching for Stephen, and had just come He has gone in an English ship," she cried.

He sailed last night, and I have lost him for And at that she leaned her quivering white lace over the bed, and raised her clenched hand over Rachel's face. " Son for son," she cried again. " May you lese your son, even as you have made me to lose mine." The child seemed likely to answer to the impious prayer, for its little strength waned visibly. And in those first hours of her shameful widowhood the evil thought came to Rachel to do with it as the baser sort among her people were allowed to do with the children they did not wish to rear—expose it to its death, before she thought of its extremity, the love of the mother prevailed over the late of the wife, and he shrived her, and then all being over, as far as breast. Then the neighbour, who aut of pity and charity had nursed her in her dark hour. ran for the priest, that with the blessing of bautism the child might die a Christian soul. The good man came, and took the little sleepbound body from Rachel's arms, and asked her the name. She did not answer and he asked again. Once more having no reply, he turned to the neighbour to know what the father's name had been. "r tephen Orry," said the good woman. "Then Stephen Stephensen," he began, dipping his fingers into the water; but at the sound of that name Ruchel cried: " No. no. no." "He has not done well by her, poor soul, whispored the woman: "call it after her own

Then Joigen Jorgensan," the priest began again; and again Rachel cried, " No, no, no, and raised herself upon her arm.

"It has no father," she said, "and I have mone. If it is to die, let it go to God's throne with the badge of no man's cruelty; and if it is to live, let it be known by no man's name save its own. Call it Jason-Jason only." And in the name of Jason the child was haptised, and so it was that Rachel. little knowing what she was doing in her blind passion and nain, severed her son from kith and kin. But in this history what she did out of the bitterness of har heart

God himself had his own great purposes From that hour the child increased in strength, and soon waxed strong, and three days after, as the babe lay cooing at Racbel's breast, and she in her own despite was tayling the first sweet joys of motherhood, the old mother of Stophen came to her again.

"This is my house," she said, "and I will keep whelter over your head no longer. You must puck and away—you and your brat, both of you." That night the Bishon of the island-Bishop Potersen, once a friend of Rachel's mother, now much in fear of the Governor, her father—came to her in secret to say that there was a house for her at the extreme west of the fishing quarter. where a fisherman had lately died, leaving the little that he had to the Church. There she betook herself with her child as soon as the days of ber lying in were over. It was a little oblong, shed, of baseltic blocks laid with peat for mortar, resembling on the outside two ancient seamen shoving shoulders together against the weather. and on the inside two tiny bird-cages.

And having no one now to stand to her, or seem to stand, in the place of bread-winner, she set herrelf to such poor work as she could do and earn a scanty living by. This was cleaning the down of the eider-duck, by passing it through a "Come away, my son," he said, and tapped Jason sieve made of yern stretched over a hoop. By a deft hand, with extreme labour, something equal ! to sixpence a day could be made in this way from then he turned with a dazed look and said, like the English traders. With such earnings Rachel lived in content, and if Jorgen Jorgensen had any knowledge of his daughter's necesarties he made no effort to relieve them. Her child lived-a happy, sprightly, joyous bird in its little engs-and her broken Leart danced to its delicious accents. It sweetened her labours, it softened her misfortunes, it made life more dear and death more dreadful; it was the strength of her arms and the courage of her soul. her summers to labour and her desire for rest. Call her wretched no longer, for now she bad her child to love. Happy little dingy cabin in the fishing quarter, amid the vats for sharks' oil and the heaps of dried cod! It was filled with heaven's own light, that came not from shove but radiated from the little gradle where ber life, her hope, her joy, her soluce lay swathed in the coverlet of all her love. And as she worked through the long summer days on the beach, with the child playing among the publics at her feet, many a dream danced before her of the days to come, whenher boy would sail in the ships that came to their coust, and perhaps take her with him to that island of the sea that had been her mother's English home. where men were good to wolden and wonwere true to men. Until then she must live where she was, a prisoner chained to a crue! rock; but she would not repine, she could wait, for the time of her deliverance was near. Her liberator was coming. He was at her feet; he was her child, her boy, her darling; and when he slumbered she saw him wax and grow, and on the bridge of hone's own rainbow she spanned her little world of shame and pain. The years went by, and Jason prew to be a strong-limbed, straight, stalwart lad, redbaired and passionate-bearted, reckless and improvident as far as improvidence was possible amid the conditions of his bringing up. He was a human water-buzel, and all his days were spent on the sea. Such work as was also play he was eager to do. He would clamber up the rocks of the island of Engy outside the harbour, to take the eggs of the eider dack from the steep places where she built her nest; and from the beginning of May to the end of June he found his mother in the eider down that she cleaned for the English traders. People whispered to Rachel that he favoured his father, both -in stature and character, but she turned a deat ear to their gloomy forebodings. Her son was as fair as the day to look upon, and if he had his lasy humours, he had also one quality which overturned them all-he loved his mother. People whispered again that in this regard also he resembled his father, who amid many vices had t

It was the winter season in that storn land of from it to the wall, trying thereby to conquer the north, whon night and day so closely commingle that the darkness seems nover to lift And in the silence of that long night Rachel lav in her little but, sinking rapidly and much alone. Jason came to her from time to time, in his great sea stockings and big gloves, and with the odonr of the brine in his long red hair. By har bedside he would stand half-an-hour in silence, with eyes full of wonderment; for life like that of an untamed colt was in his own warm limbs, and death was very strange to him. A sudden hemorrhage brought the end, and one day darker than the rest, when Juson hastened home from the boats, the pain and panting of death work there before him. His mother's pallid face lay on her arm, her great dark eyes were glazed al. ready, she was breathing hard and every breath was a spasm. Jasen ran for the priest-heauma that had named him in his baptism. The good old man came hobbling along, book in band, and seeing how life flickered he would have sent for it had yet touched food. But in the throes, as the Governor, but Rachel forbade him. Jason stood with his back to the glow of the peat fire, and his hard-set face in the gloom. Never a word came from him, never a sign, never a tear. Only with the strange light in his wild eyes he looked on and listened. Rachel stirred, and called to him.

" Are you there, Jason?" she said, feebly, and he stepped to ber side. "Closer," she whispered; and he took her cold hand in both him hands, and then her dim eye knew where to look for his face. "Good-bye, my brave lad," she said. "I do not fear to leave you. You are strong, you are brave, and the world is kind to them that can light it. Only to the weak is it cruel-only to the weak and the timid-only to women-only to helpless women sold into the slavery of heart And then she told him everything her love her levalty, her life. In twenty little words she

She was gone who had been everything to him. She had sunk like a wave, and the waves of the ocean were pressing on behind her. She was lost, and the tides of life were flowing as before.

The old pastor shuffled to his feet, moppi his moist eyes with his red handkerchiet on the shoulder. "Not yet." the lad answered hoursely.

"I will bunt the world over until I find that man, and when I have found him I will glav him. "What are you saying?" cried the priest.

But Jason went on with an awful solemuity. If he should die, and we should never meet I will hant the world over until I find his son. and when I have found him I will kill him for his father's sake."

"Silence, silence," cried the priest, "So help me God !" said Jason.

Then they passed at ones to break. He pushed the cold face gently back on to the pillow, and fell over it peered into every, archway, and went back to with sobs that shook the bed.

They buried the daughter of the Governor in the acre allotted to the dead poor in the yard of the Cathedral of Reykjavik. The bells were ringing a choral peal between matins and morning service. Happy little girls in bright new gowns, with primroses on their breasts yellowing their round chins, were skipping in at the wide west doorway, chattering as they went like lin-. nets in suring.
